Silver coin sales are at near-record highs, but premiums are soaring. American Silver Eagles are selling at $22 on eBay - a 35% premium over the spot silver price.

Many investors have taken refuge from higher premiums in silver ETFs - but not all silver ETFs are created equal.

If you're looking to buy silver, the first question to answer is, should I buy physical silver or paper silver?

Both investments let you profit from silver's price moves. To decide which one is best for you, you need to answer some questions about your investment goals.

To help, here's a closer look at each way to play the white metal.

Silver Price Today Cushioned by Solid Demand

(<https://moneymorning.com/2014/05/22/silver-price-today-cushioned-by-solid-demand/>)

By DIANE ALTER (HTTPS://MONEYMORNING.COM/AUTHOR/DALTER/), Contributing Writer, Money Morning - May 22, 2014

(<https://moneymorning.com/2014/05/22/silver-price-today-cushioned-by-solid-demand/>)

The silver price today moved solidly higher in morning trading following some positive economic data out of China.

July Comex silver traded up $0.392, or 1.26%, at $19.73, after the preliminary HSBC China manufacturing purchasing managers index (PMI) for May came in at 49.7. That was up from 48.1 in April, and was the best reading in five months.

It's like Money Morning Global Resources Specialist Peter Krauth has been saying: A low silver price doesn't scare away investors; it draws them in.

As silver prices slumped 36% in 2013, retail investors took advantage of the dips and sent physical silver demand up 13% to an all-time high, according to World Silver Survey 2014.

Here's what else is moving demand for physical silver today...

After rising as much as 16% earlier this year, silver prices are now nearly unchanged year-to-date. They're up just 0.2%, while gold has gained 7.2%.

The silver price isn't the only number that's lagging...

Silver's option activity sits near a decade low. That's highly unusual - and won't last.

In fact, the low activity suggests some big changes ahead for the white metal...

Silver Price to Keep Rising on Safe-Haven Demand (<https://moneymorning.com/2014/04/25/silver-price-to-keep-rising-on-safe-haven-demand/>)

The silver price was modestly higher Friday amid mounting geopolitical tensions that have stoked bullish options activity.

In early afternoon trading, spot silver was last up $0.03, or 0.15%, at 19.78 an ounce. The metal traded as low as $19.57 and as high as $19.92 in another volatile session.

The white metal went on a rollercoaster ride Thursday, but here's why silver's in the bulls' corner moving forward... (<https://moneymorning.com/2014/04/25/silver-price-to-keep-rising-on-safe-haven-demand/>)

Silver Prices Move Higher Amid Stock Market Sell-Off, Dovish Fed (<https://moneymorning.com/2014/04/11/silver-prices-move-higher-amid-stock-market-sell-off-dovish-fed/>)

(<https://moneymorning.com/2014/04/11/silver-prices-move-higher-amid-stock-market-sell-off-dovish-fed/>)

Silver prices spiked some 2%, or $0.51, to $20.49 an ounce intraday Thursday before closing the session up $0.37 to $20.14 an ounce.

The gains came as the U.S. stock markets sold off sharply. Stocks sank even after the Labor Department reported U.S. weekly jobless claims dropped to a seven-year low, a sign of ongoing recovery in the labor market and the economy.

But what we care about is the big picture.

Here's what's ahead for silver... (<https://moneymorning.com/2014/04/11/silver-prices-move-higher-amid-stock-market-sell-off-dovish-fed/>)

Spot silver prices rose $0.07, or 0.4%, to $19.86 an ounce midday Monday as precious metal traders and investors gear up for a busy week ahead.

Market participants remain guarded, with a spate of U.S. economic data flooding in as the week wears on. Capping the busy week will be Friday's closely watched March jobs report.

Meanwhile, Monday caps the end of 2014's first quarter.

So let's take a look at silver... (<https://moneymorning.com/2014/03/31/silver-prices-slip-2014s-q1-consumer-demand-still-solid/>)

Investing in Silver: Singapore Supplier Opens Vault on Soaring Demand (<https://moneymorning.com/2014/03/24/investing-silver-singapore-supplier-opens-vault-soaring-demand/>)

By DIANE ALTER (HTTPS://MONEYMORNING.COM/AUTHOR/DALTER/), Contributing Writer, Money Morning - March 24, 2014

(<https://moneymorning.com/2014/03/24/investing-silver-singapore-supplier-opens-vault-soaring-demand/>)

Amid frenzied demand to buy and store silver, a Singapore retail supplier of coins and bars opened a new 600-metric-ton vault on Monday.

The sizable Silver Bullion Pte. Ltd. storage facility can hold some $390 million worth of silver (at Friday's prices of $20.33 per ounce). Known as The Safe House, the new facility is located west of Changi International Airport. At present, it keeps some 37 tons of silver, mostly for its retail clients, behind a secure 2.5-ton stainless door.

Here's what that means for investing in silver...

Silver prices today (Friday) were modestly higher as bargain hunters stepped up to buy the dips. In early trading, spot silver last traded up $0.11 to $20.45.

It's been a volatile and punishing week for silver.

In morning trading Thursday, silver futures for May delivery slumped 2.3% to $20.355 an ounce, on pace for the biggest drop since March 7.

That put white metal prices heading for their fourth consecutive day of losses, the longest streak since Nov. 13... (<https://moneymorning.com/2014/03/21/silver-prices-today-rebound-taking-hit-fomc/>)

Buoyed in early trading by a flight to safety amid simmering turmoil between Ukraine and Russia, silver prices today are showing signs of life.

In morning trading Friday, the price of silver rose $0.62, or 2.44%, at $21.89 an ounce. While the white metal slipped $0.148 Thursday to finish the session at $21.25 an ounce, the dip came on mild profit taking. Silver had a stellar showing Wednesday, ending up 2.66%, or $0.55, at $21.33.

Despite lower silver prices, Vancouver's Pan American Silver Corp. (Nasdaq: PAAS) reported strong earnings yesterday (Thursday) that sent its shares soaring 6.28% over the day - and up to an 8.35% gain through Friday.

At first glance, Pan American's story may appear grim. In 2013, silver prices fell 35.7%, and Pan American shares fell right alongside, for a remarkably similar 35.57% loss across the year.

Thursday's earnings posted a net loss of $293.1 million, or $1.94 per share, during Q4 2013.

Gary Vaynerchuk: Earn $100,000 in Income with this “Side Hustle”

Keith Fitz-Gerald Jun 19, 2019

Serial entrepreneur Gary Vaynerchuk told CNBC recently that he's seen people go from having nothing to making $100,000 using something he calls, “retail arbitrage flipping.”

My eyebrows shot up.

Not only because Gary Vee – that's how he's known the inspirational wealth building crowd – is right, but because of the specific choice of words he used.

Retail...Arbitrage...Flipping.

The concept is critical in today's markets and when it comes to your money.

Here's what you need to know...

Gary Vaynerchuk is a serial entrepreneur worth north of $100 million according to various sources. Some say perhaps even $160 million. Either way, people listen when he speaks... as they should.

I ran across a CNBC story last week in which he talked about a side-hustle he calls “retail arbitrage flipping.” And, I about fell out of my chair for reasons that will become clear in a moment.

The concept is very simple.

Hustlers – meaning people who are interested in breaking free of the rat race by creating another stream of income, often part-time – buy stuff at discounted prices from Walmart Inc. (NYSE:WMT (https://moneymorning.com/markets/stocks/?j1_module=stockDetail&j1_symbol=WMT&j1_region=US)), TJ Maxx of The TJX Companies Inc. (NYSE:TJX (https://moneymorning.com/markets/stocks/?j1_module=stockDetail&j1_symbol=TJX&j1_region=US)), or Target Corp. (NYSE:TGT (https://moneymorning.com/markets/stocks/?j1_module=stockDetail&j1_symbol=TGT&j1_region=US))), then sell it online at higher prices via eBay, Craigslist, or Amazon.

Vaynerchuk told CNBC that the idea is so powerful that he's seen people go from being “homeless to building up $50,000 to $100,000.”

That's music to my ears.

The same principle applies with your investing dollars. And, that's why I created Straight Line Profits (<https://moneymappress.com/subscription/straight-line-profits>) and pioneered something called the “Arbitrage Detection Grid,” or ADG for short.

I screen thousands of stocks the way Vaynerchuk is encouraging people to screen items they sell. And, similarly, when you find something you can buy for less then sell it for more – I encourage people to pounce.

Vaynerchuk thinks failure comes down to people's ambition according to CNBC – and I'm paraphrasing here... he sees people in debt "that are like 'I'm not going to Marshalls (to buy stuff)' and he's like 'that's why you're a loser.'"

Here, too, I agree.

Investors tell me constantly that they want to wait for "confirmation", for the headlines to calm down, that they're not ready, that stocks they want to buy are expensive. Any number of excuses.

I won't go so far as to call those folks losers like Vaynerchuk does, but that's what they're doing if they don't invest...losing.

Today's highly computerized markets move quickly which means you have to do the same thing if you want to make money. No deliberating, no dilly-dallying around.

You identify something you can buy low and you sell high at or near its "true price."

If you're scared or uncertain, I get that. But that does not give you a license to whine about missing profits because you don't take the time to spot opportunities and act upon them.

The ADG Grid, like Vaynerchuk's method, is very simple and straightforward to understand.

I look for the strongest sectors then the strongest companies using a form of refined math originally developed by NASA's Jet Propulsion Laboratory – JPL for short – to identify specific stocks the market has priced far below their "True Value." Then, I recommend 'em.

Visually, the process looks like this.

<https://totalwealthresearch.com/wp-content/uploads/2019/06/true-value.jpg>

Or, if you're mathematically inclined, something similar to this when applied against a traditional price chart and proprietary variables unique to the ADG calculations.

<https://totalwealthresearch.com/wp-content/uploads/2019/06/true-price-wall-streets-price.jpg>

Does it work?

Ask Gary Vaynerchuk. He's – again – worth $160 million and one of the savviest people on the planet when it comes to spotting opportunity.

Ask Warren Buffett. He pioneered the concept of buying companies using their intrinsic value, knowing full well they're worth a whole lot more. Every $10,000 invested in Warren Buffett's Berkshire Hathaway when he became a majority shareholder in 1964 would be worth a jaw dropping $162.37 million today.

of the legendary Jim Rogers. Together with George Soros – another name you might recognize, he ran the Quantum Fund which racked up 4,200% from 1970 to 1980 while the S&P 500 gained ... wait for it... 47%. That's enough to turn $10,000 into $4.12 million.

[CRITICAL] How to Get Million Dollar Masterclasses for Just $1 (<https://pro.moneymappressinfo.com/m/1279201>)

My point, mind you, is NOT to sell you something.

Let's be clear about that.

What I want you to understand is that here you have three different and very successful individuals, all of whom hunt for opportunity based on the concept we've just discussed...spotting things selling at prices different than they should or could be.

You can carefully research Warren Buffett's holdings by digging into Berkshire Hathaway a bit. Or learn where Roger's is focused and what he's thinking about by reading up on what he's saying in the media.

Or, you can even follow Gary Vaynerchuk on social media to all sorts of interesting side-hustles. He's definitely got a few strong opinions on the matter, not mention 1.92 million followers on Twitter.

Just make a decision in light of what we've discussed today.

The sooner you get the notion of paying less for a company in your head than it's actually worth, the sooner you can get down to making real money.

By the way, if you ARE interested in Straight Line Profits, feel free to watch a very informative summit I filmed earlier this year. It's available by clicking here (<https://pro.moneymappressinfo.com/m/1279424>). Then imagine what a difference the 41 double- and triple-digit winning plays I've brought to readers' attention could mean to you.

But only if you "hustle."

Until next time,

Keith

Investing in Silver: Four Ways to Invest and Why

Gold is a big deal, but did you know you can invest in silver too?

By Eric Reed

Nov 5, 2018 5:12 AM EST

TheStreet Video

Gold isn't the only game in town, even though you'd never know it by watching late night TV.

Here's what to know and what to consider if you'd like to invest in silver.

What Does Investing In Silver Mean?

Investing in silver means putting your money into the production, trading or outright ownership of silver metal. For most investors this means buying quantities of bullion in coin or bar form and holding onto it.

While silver is technically a commodity like any other, precious metals are somewhat different as an asset class. Unlike crude oil, corn or lumber, the value of silver isn't limited to its consumption uses. In fact, while silver does have non-trivial industrial applications, most of its value comes from its status as an investment vehicle.

Like gold, the price of silver is chiefly driven by market demand. Since silver is used relatively rarely compared to other industrial metals it does not have production/consumption cycles of most commodities. Instead its value is chiefly driven by either long term investors or those seeking to ride out a down market. Often this means that silver (again, like gold) tends to perform counter-cyclically to the stock market.

Silver Is Not Better Money

It is, however, at this point that we should note the enormous volume of bad reporting on the subject of precious metals investment.

Many articles written on this subject urge investors to put their money into silver and gold because these assets are "real money" and inherently safer than fiat currencies. This is wrong.

Silver has limited inherent value. While, unlike a fiat currency, its supply is limited, like a fiat currency it is real money only to the extent that other parties will to accept it in trade. Investors who believe in the "real money" theory of silver should try paying their bills in specie and see exactly how far that will get them. Others should consider the asset's high (sometimes enormous) volatility index compared to that of the dollar.

Fiat currency has structural value because of its ties to a national economy and its role in tax collection. Silver does not. Its value is driven almost entirely by supply and demand with some influence from industrial applications. That does not make it a poor choice of investment, but it does mean that its value depends entirely on what someone else is willing to give you for it. Just like currencies, stocks and pretty much every other form of investment on the market.

It is no less real than any of those, but no more so either. The fact that you can hold it in your hand doesn't change that.

Why Invest In Silver?

Compared with gold, silver is generally cheaper. An investor can buy more silver for less money, making it potentially popular choice for lower capitalization investors.

Silver is also more volatile than gold. For active investors this can make silver a potentially lucrative investment, as its tendency toward price swings can lead to sharp upward movements. Much of this volatility comes from the fact that silver is a smaller market than gold, and that gold tends to draw more investors seeking more stability in uncertain markets.

Compared with stocks and paper investments, however, silver is still generally seen as a safe haven for investment during market instability. Despite its volatility, investors will often move their money into precious metals at the beginning of a downturn.

Finally, silver is seen as a more liquid safe investment than other non-market options like government bonds. While the high volatility of silver can make selling more difficult, as you may have to wait for the price you want, it is still easier to end your position than in a Treasury bond, and often for a better (if still relatively low) return.

How to Invest in Silver

There are a number of ways you can include silver among your assets:

Bullion

Perhaps the most popular way to invest in silver, you can simply purchase quantities of the metal outright.

This method has the advantage of simplicity. You own the asset outright and can sell it at any time for market price, typically minus a dealer commission. You are responsible for storage, insurance and logistics, but you also don't have to deal with any third parties. While you are exposed to the full volatility of the silver market you can also sell as soon as the market gets hot if you choose.

Silver Futures and Options

The most common way to invest in commodities, futures and options contracts allow you to invest in the movement of the silver market. Your profit here comes not from the market value of silver but from how that value changes. For more information, see our articles on commodities and futures.

Silver ETFs

As we have written before, ETFs are funds traded on a stock exchange. They are made of bundled third party assets and your value comes from how those underlying assets perform.

A silver ETF is built to track the market price of silver metal. It is often built around a specific quantity of silver or group of bullion assets. This is generally considered one of the best ways to own and trade silver with high liquidity and without the logistical challenges of owning the physical asset.

Silver Production Stocks and Funds

Finally, you can invest in the silver market. Through stocks and mutual funds you can invest in silver mining companies and firms which deal in the production, distribution and use of silver. These stocks generally track the market value of silver but have value beyond pure supply and demand. As a result they can be more reliable and less volatile than pure silver, but are also subject to potential business-related liabilities.

Should You Invest in Silver?

Silver can be a strong addition to any portfolio but only in measured quantities.

As a stabilizing asset silver, like gold, can give your portfolio a steady, diversified return compared to traditional stocks and mutual funds. In particular, they can do so while retaining much higher liquidity than many other forms of safe investments (as noted above).

However, you should be careful about how much of your portfolio you dedicate to silver or precious metals. Silver is highly volatile and, if it occupies too many assets, can swing your entire portfolio.

Like most diversified assets, silver has its role in a good portfolio, in moderation.
