OK, so if I were to pay the $2000, what next? How much do I have to shell out to bring traffic?

I'm always willing to stick my neck out if there's something in it for me, and I don't listen to whingers and whiners who expect a free ride. I'm a hard worker, can afford the $2000 and would be prepared to work my  off for $1000 repeat commissions.

I want to hear from people who've had success, not tyre kickers.

Thanks

Mark

Well after giving them the initial $49 I thought that I was in the market to make mega bucks, but nothing was even said about anymore money, until I completed step six of the 21 step programme, then...they wanted you to pay for the whole package. I got emails from my coach prompting me to finish step six and even the "creator" of this system Matt Lloyd, which felt at the time very personal.

But as soon as i said that I had no more money I was dropped in the ocean-I was no longer a commodity.

My Top Tier Business Marketing Business Training Program Review from Atlanta, Georgia

Yeah, my coach, Zak Ahmed never had time for me until i got to step 6 when he called to find out when i would be purchasing licensing rights for $1997. Really??

And get his continued support? Right. I told him it would be a little while but that i could still sell other products until i made the money to buy licensing rights. That was a month ago.

I haven't heard from him since.

Thank God i didn't have the money to spend with them because i was a sucker for MOBE in the beginning. Don't be a sucker.

My top tier business Mobe

Yes they are a big SCAM, Top tier business have a lot names of websites they used to scams people.first they start you with $ 49.00 promise you that your going to make a lot money with the 21 step system. The coaches are a big lie and they master on what they are doing to push you spend money for them to make money and after you make purchase and you never hear from them no more until you realize they SCAM you. A coach make borrow $10,000.00 to go Titanium and promise me a lot thing his going to do for me to make money and when I call him he said his computer crash since that never hear from him again for month

My Top Tier Business - Program Review from Arlington, Washington

     1.0 Details

No one has the right to judge a book by the cover. I am not a loser neither.

I have worked hard for everything I got. I paid the $49 dollars for the 21 step program. I was excited about the program. Everything changed when I told my coach I didn't have the other $1997. The daily emails stopped.

I had a hard time accessing my accounts could get any advice etc etc. It just isn't right to do that to people

My Top Tier Business in Wilmington, Delaware - Going deeper to find the truth

I paid the $49.00 and went to the six step of the 21, and I was assigned a coach who make $202,000.00 a month. He asked me how much I want to make every month.

I told him $16,000. Now this is when you have to put your money to work. I did not have the money he was asking me. I got mad like you.

My Top Tier Business Wants you to pay them to earn money for them.

★★★★★ 5.0 Details

They basically tell you, upon entering their website, that they will send you tons of money for free. Then they make you pay $49 to reach a certain point in the process, and then they make you pay $1,997 if you want to actually earn good money from the part of the program that they told you would send you money for free. Then, they still keep some commissions back from you unless you pay an outrageous additional amount measuring in the $10,000s.

All of this is really just to send them traffic for their sales funnel. Really, there are other sites out there that allow you to take advantage of their sales funnel without buying a "license".

Rip off. Watch my video review for more info.

My Top Tier Business - Private Personal Coaching Review from Philadelphia, Pennsylvania

★★★★★ 5.0 Details

I was told in the original video when i first joined mttb, that my coach would be from my time zone. Well it Seems that it it's NOT TRUE.

I LIVE in the U.S.A and my coach is in Ireland. That's a 5hr time difference. his name is Damin Martin, he seems nice, Although he only answers 1 in 5 questions i ask him. The first time he skype called me it was Around midnight, then the 2nd was at 8 am.

We set it up for Damien to Call me at either 10 am. Or noonWHAT I WOULD LIKE IS A COACH WHO LIVES HERE, IN THE GOOD OLD U.S.A. IS IT POSSIBLE TO CHANGE MY COACH .

Please let me know. My name is Sandra Miller, @ paintmesamm2@gmail.com

'This Was A Colossal Screw-Up': A Close Look At A Case Dismissed For Misconduct

Listen · 7:257:25Playlist

Getting a case dismissed because of government misconduct is rare, representing only a tiny fraction of the tens of thousands of prosecutions the Justice Department pursues every year. By that measure, Reddy Annappareddy beat the odds.

Roy Scott/Getty Images/Ikon Images

Standing at the kitchen counter in his spotless town house near the Baltimore airport, Reddy Annappareddy heated up some water to make his lawyer a coffee and contemplated his hard fall from grace.

Annappareddy once presided over a pharmacy delivery business that stretched across six states — until one day in July 2013, when the FBI raided his operation and prompted him to attempt suicide. Alone in a hotel room in Las Vegas, as his employees frantically called him to report the bad news, Annappareddy downed some scotch and Benadryl pills, went to the bathtub and slashed both his wrists.

Hours later, he awoke, alive but weak, and headed for the hospital. Thus began a dark legal odyssey that would last more than three years. "It's a constant," Annappareddy said. "It's like a knife on my throat. You don't know what's tomorrow going to bring."

Annappareddy lost his ability to sleep through the night. He lost his house on 3-and-a-half acres. He lost his Bentley and a garage full of other luxury vehicles. But he refused to give up faith in his own innocence. Instead, he hired a new team of lawyers who uncovered a series of problems with witnesses and evidence.

Getting a case dismissed because of government misconduct is rare, representing only a tiny fraction of the tens of thousands of prosecutions the Justice Department pursues every year. By that measure, Annappareddy beat the odds.

His encounter with the justice system represented a startling turnaround for a man featured in a public radio podcast for his unlikely career arc, from working nights at a Rite Aid to being named entrepreneur of the year for the state of Maryland. Annappareddy said he came to the attention of prosecutors, the FBI and Maryland Medicaid fraud investigators after a disgruntled employee tried to blow the whistle on him. But he does know that the feds took the case seriously — eventually charging four people who worked for him, and hoping to win their cooperation against him at trial.

That trial didn't go well for Annappareddy. The lead prosecutor, Assistant U.S. Attorney Sandra Wilkinson, told the jury he presided over a sham, billing government health insurance programs for expensive prescription pills to treat HIV and cancer that customers never received. The prosecutor said he fleeced the government out of several million dollars. And in December 2014, he was convicted.

The judge told him to go home, on house arrest, and prepare to spend the next 12 years in federal prison. Annappareddy took a different approach. "The government is saying fraud, and I'm not fraud," he said. "I'm going to fight it. I told my wife, 'I'm going to fight this again.' "

He found new lawyers. And what they uncovered would upend his life, all over again.

Josh Greenberg joined the defense only after Annappareddy's conviction. Greenberg spent hours sifting through evidence. Before long, he had found a pattern of problems with the Justice Department's theory. And he demanded a new trial.

"Let me tell you, this was a colossal screw up," said Sol Wisenberg, a former prosecutor who closely follows allegations of government misconduct. He wasn't involved in the case, but said it's one for the books. "The thing about this case is you had an accumulation of outrageous conduct."

The first thing to add up, Wisenberg said, was false evidence, presented at trial, which the government later acknowledged was incorrect. The evidence related to how much money government health insurance programs lost to Annappareddy's pharmacies. At trial, federal prosecutors claimed millions of dollars in losses. But after Annappareddy's lawyers started digging, they found the opposite: rather than losses, they said, there was a surplus. Government experts had double counted and made other basic mistakes.

In court filings, prosecutors said it was a simple human error in a complex case. And, they argued, there was still plenty of evidence to prove Annappareddy's guilt.

Lawyer Josh Greenberg has a different take.

"The false evidence went to the core of the case," Greenberg said. "And I believe the prosecutors and agents were at least reckless, if not knowing, in presenting that false evidence."
