Design Editor/Blogger

The Baltimore Sun

Aug 1990 – May 2009 · 18 years 10 months

I planned and designed daily sections of the newspaper. That included section fronts as well as inside pages. On any given night I might be assigned to the A-section, the metro section the sports section or the business section, but during most of my tenure I primarily designed the business section. Designing pages at The Sun required me to learn a series of customized computer pagination systems (SII, Harris, CCI) in addition to the use of standard commercial Mac and Windows software...

The Catholic Review

Sep 1984 – Aug 1990 · 6 years

As News Editor, I designed all the pages for the two-section broadsheet publication, edited almost all the staff and wire stories, selected national and international stories sent from the Catholic News Service, wrote the headlines and captions and supervised the production one day a week at the Annapolis Capital plant.

I worked as a reporter for several years before my promotion to News Editor. As a reporter, I researched and interviewed sources on such beats as Associated Catholic...

Recommendations

A preview of what LinkedIn members have to say about David:

- " David Zeiler is a superb researcher, a strong writer and a dependable, meticulous editor. And one of his greatest strengths is his willingness to step in and help whenever there's a need, and to do so with the same commitment to excellence that he brings to every task he's assigned.
- " David wrote "The Mac Experience" column when I was Business Producer. The ground-breaking weekly report was "an intelligent discussion of all things Macintosh." It was innovative, understandable, edgy and reflective. It brought reprint requests from as far as Germany and Japan. And, all of it had to do with David's passion for Macs and the meticulous way he went about developing column topics that brought many reader comments and interest worldwide. "The Mac Experience" under David helped put Baltimoresun.com on the map. I cannot be more thankful.
